Trauma Informed practice . Given the growing awareness of the prevalence of adverse and traumatic experiences in childhood and an understanding of the impact of these, interest is growing in what is often termed trauma informed practice. The framework 'Transforming Psychological Trauma' xix. indicates that this is everyone's . business

Awareness of trauma, including of complex trauma has progressed over the last 20 years. This includes the development of the framework called "Trauma-informed care and practice". This framework is informed by new knowledge around attachment, development, working with the body, memory and an understanding of self.

A trauma informed policy The field of education cannot ignore the issue of traumatic stress if schools are to meet the expectations of parents and the wider community. As Barbara Oehlberg (2008) says: At a time when schools and teachers are exceedingly stressed and stretched, becoming trauma informed may seem an ambitious and challenging strategy.

And Trauma Informed Practice

Trauma-informed care is a way of providing services by which social workers recognize the prevalence of early adversity in the lives of clients, view presenting problems as symptoms of maladaptive coping, and understand how early trauma shapes a client's fundamental beliefs about the world and affects his or her psychosocial functioning across the life span.

Providing attachment-informed care in residential settings requires a policy and culture shift which recognises and values the healing potential of special relationships. Some children's homes already do this and in these settings the inevitable disruptions in relationship that happen are recognised as painful and anxiety-provoking for children.
